INTRODUCTION

Economic concerns about the problem of guaranteeing the property turn-over among the people, so that they can maximize the functions of lifes as servants of God to reach falah in the world and akherat (hereafter). So, the economy is a COLLECTIVE activity; the distribution of property among the people as the main principle.

The concept of distribution according to the Islamic view is to increase revenue sharing and distribution of wealth so, that circulation can be improved that the existing wealth can be abundant but not just evenly circulated among certain groups of people only. (Rahman, 1995: 93).
The position of distribution in economic activity is very important. Ideally, the distribution becomes the primary responsibility by the government, but unfortunately, this role has not been used as an important domain, but only applied in the form of tax levies (either individual or corporate taxes). Although, in fact, there are many more productive ways than just a tax levy. Currently, the creativities of Muslim community in order to contribute the distribution of wealth to all ummah (people) is carried by institutionalizing the ZIS, in which, in this case, the government is not directly involved in the mobilization of income management received by ZIS. Anas Zarqa suggested that the definition of the distribution of income as a transfer of wealth between individuals by means of exchange (via Market) or by other means, such as inheritance, sadaqah, waqf and zakat. (Zarqa, 1995: 181). Based on the definition put forward by Anas Zarqa mentioned above, it is understood that not only limited to the management of Zakat, the infaq (donation) and shadaqoh, the existing distribution mechanisms in the Islamic economic system can be broadly grouped into two groups of mechanisms, namely (1) what the so called economic mechanisms and (2) non-economic mechanism.
The Economic mechanism is that by relying on the distribution of economic activities in order to achieve the distribution of wealth, such as the management of markets, trade and business cooperation in the Islamic pattern. Non-economic mechanisms, for example, state-driven society, gives individuals who are able to work on agricultural land, but do not have any land, then the state will provide lands belong to the state to the individuals who do not have the lands. Or, the state gave the properties to individuals who have land but do not have the capital to manage it. Another example is the state can give its property to an individual who owes money but can not afford to pay it off so that they can pay off their debts. Non-economic mechanism, instead of having not done by the State, it is then carried by the socio-economic institutions initiated by the community.
Giving Zakat paid by the muzakki (payer) to mustahik (payee) is another form of non-economic mechanism in terms of wealth distribution. Zakah is an obligatory worship which must be implemented by the muzakki. In this case, the state is obliged to force anyone on the muzakki to pay the zakat. With these coercive activities, there will be no circulation of wealth through economic mechanisms of the rich to especially the poor. The zakat is then distributed to certain groups, namely eight ashnaf. So, zakat is the worship with economic impact, which acts as an instrument of wealth distribution among humans.

Economic mechanism is done through the development of what we refer to as the "Economic Cooperation" or "Collaborative Economics" which in the language of religion is referred to as "shirkah", which is a partnership between two or more parties in a project, respectively - each party is entitled to all the benefits and responsible for business carried on well in favorable conditions or otherwise.
In the context of the development, it can be applied what so-called the concept of farming Shirkah, stock breeding shirkah, gardening shirkah, fishery shirkah and so on. Shirkah patterns vary so much, and they have actually been executed by sociologically in Indonesia although not realize that Islamic economics has actually been done.

The basic principles of profit sharing for the agricultural sector as mostly used as follows:
1. System of maro (working half plots, getting a half returns);
2. System of mertelu (working for one third plots, getting one-third returns);
3. System of mertelu (working for one-fourth plots, getting one-fourth returns).

In general, profit-sharing system used in the cultivation of agricultural cooperation involving two parties i.e., the owner of the paddy and rice cultivators, where the implementation is done by mutual agreement in accordance with the agreed contract. The implementation of the sharing system among farmers in the countryside, is not only based on the material to meet the needs of any benefit, but also as a form of communication adhesives and their kinship.

Collaborative economic model or Shirkah is very appropriate to be developed. The only way to beat the economic dominance of individuals are economic congregation, meaning that's why the congregation was encouraged and motivated in such a way that the paradigm in building a life together has to grow together.

In line with the economic development of collaborative, cooperative economics, economics congregation or economics shirkah, it is also necessary either for knowledge and management skills. So, it is also necessary education, training and mentoring as well developed collaborative entrepreneurship in such a way in the business collaboration systems in the paradigm of Islam (shirkah).

Problem Formulation

Entrepreneurship in Islam

Islam does not give any explicit explanations related to the concept of entrepreneurship, but there has been a closely connection between them; they have a closely related spirits or souls, although technically, the term used differently.

The Islam term uses ‘hard work’, self-reliance (biyadihi), and not whiny. At least, there are some verses of the Koran and Hadith which can be a reference to the message about the spirit of hard work and self-reliance, such as; "Charity work is best done with the stream of his own sweat, 'amalurajuli biyadihi (HR.Abu Dawud)";

"Hands on hands is better than hands under hands"; "Al yad al 'ulya Khairun min al yad al sufla" (HR.Bukhari and Muslim) (with a very symbolic language of the Prophet encouraged the people to work hard in order to have wealth, so as to give something to someone else), atuzzakah. (Q.S. Nisa: 77)

"Man must pay zakat (God requires man to work hard to be rich and able to perform the obligation to pay zakat)".

In a verse Allah says, "Work hard, then Allah and those who believe will see you work hard" (Surat at-Tawbah: 105). Therefore, if the prayer has been fulfilled then disperse you in the earth and look for the gift (good luck) of God. (Q.S. al-Jumu’ah: 10)

Even the words of the Prophet, "Verily work for kosher rizki as an obligation after worship fardlu" (HR.Tabrani and Bayhaqi).

This Nash is clearly signaled that humans work hard and live independently. Working hard is the essence of entrepreneurship. The principle of hard work, according to Wafiduddin, is a real step that can produce success (sustenance), but must go through a process fraught with challenges (reziko). In other words, people who dare to pass the risk will gain great opportunities of rizki. The word ‘rizki’ have a winged meaning; sustenance as well reziko (read: risk).

In the history of the Prophet Muhammad, his wife and most of his friends were the traders and the most popular state entrepreneur. He was a practitioner of economic and the figure model for people. Therefore, it is not true to say that the mental foreign entrepreneurial spirit is inherent in Islam itself. Islam is not a religion of the trader, spread around the world at least until 13th century AD, by Muslim traders.

Based on the trading activities carried out, and most of the companions of the Prophet have changed the glory of one's view of the world that is not located on the nobility of blood, nor in a high position, or a lot of money, but on the job. Therefore, the Prophet also said: "Innallaha yuhibbul muhtarif" (surely Allah loves those who work to earn a living). Umar Ibn Khattab said instead that, "I hate one of you who does not want to work that concerns the affairs of the world".

The presence of Islam in Indonesia is also spread by the merchants. In addition to spreading religious knowledge, these traders also passed salesmanship particularly to coastal communities. In the Pantura (northern region, for example, most people have a strong religious base, chanting and business activities has become a very familiar and fused term, so that the term is very famous with Jigang (Koran and trade).

The history also noted the well-known Islamic figure as tough businessmen such as Abdul Ghani Aziz, Agus Dasaad, Djohan Soetan, Perpatih, Jhohan Soelaiman, Samanhudi Haji, Haji Shamsuddin, Niti Semito, and Rahman Tamin.

What described by the above mentioned, at least can be a proof that the ethos of businesses owned by Muslims very high one, or in other words, Islam and trade is like ‘two sides of one coin’. It is true of what the Prophet had mentioned, "Be ye trade because it constitutes 90 percent of the door of good luck" (HR. Ahmad).

Motif of Entrepreneurship in Islam

Doing entrepreneurship gets a place of honor in Islam, such as said by the Apostle: "What earning is the best one, Ya Rasulullah" He replied: He is a person who worked with his hands and every sale and purchase of the net." (HR. Al-Bazzar).

In QS.Al-Baqarah: 275 is explained that Allah has permitted trading activities and forbidden usury. The usury activity is very detrimental because it makes trading activities undeveloped. This is because of the money and capital only rotates on one side that can eventually exploit the desperate needs of the people livings.

A praised behavior in the Entrepreneurship. According to Imam Ghazali, there are 6 characteristics of commendable conduct in trade, namely: First, it does not take a lot more profit. Paying the price a little more expensive to poor traders. Cheapen the price and gave the pieces to poor buyers, so it will double the reward. When paying off debt, then pay faster than a predetermined time. Cancel the sale and purchase if the buyers want it. When selling food to the poor in installments, then do not be billed if the person is not able to pay it and freeing of debt if he dies.

Secondly, Debt Management. This debt has been attached to the life of our society. Sin will not be lost if the debt is not paid. Even people died in syahid, the sin of debt will never be apologized. So, if someone dies, the heirs are required to pay off the debt. But if the person has tried to pay, but it really cannot afford it, and he later died, the Prophet became guarantor. As in the following hadith: "Whoever of my ummah who have debt, then he tried hard to pay, then he dies before the debt is paid off, then I am the guardian." (HR. Ahmad).

Third, Demonstration Effect or ‘showing off the wealth’ will invite the social envy, others become envious, inviting thieves / robbers, making people capital become ‘frozen’ and making people unproductive ones. The Prophet recommends that we use the money for God's interests in ridhoi Allah, especially for the purpose of development of productivity used for the benefit of the people. Mentioned in a hadith: "He who takes care of orphans with possessions, then let him trade the treasure for him, do not let the treasure eroded alms (zakat)." (HR. At-Tarmidzi and Ad-Daruquthni).

In the hadith, we can conclude that if we have the capital, then it should not be stored for granted, but it must be used to produce something.

Fourth, Guiding the Down-liners. The relationship between employers and workers should be guided by a sense of compassion; mutual need and mutual help. It can be seen from the relationship in the field of employment. Employers provide the employment and workers receive sustenance in the form of wages from employers. The workers provide power and the abilities to help entrepreneurs to complete the works being ordered. The employers have the rights to rule the subordinates and profit. The employers also have obligations to pay the employees’ wages as soon as possible and protect their employees. As in the following hadith: "Give your employees’ wages before their sweat dry." (HR. Ibn Majah).

Theory of Collaboration in the Islamic Business

a. Syirkah Abdan. Syirkah abdan (physical syirkah)/syirkah a’mal (working syirkah)/ syirkah shama’i (merchant syirkah)/ syirkah taqabbul (income syirkah). A form of shirkah between two or more parties than among workers / professionals in which they agreed to work together; doing a job and sharing of income received. Example: collaboration between accountants, doctors, lawyers, tailors, carpenters and other buildings.

b. Syirkah Wujah. It is a collaboration between two parties in which each party is totally exclude capital. They exercise its right based on third-party trust. Each partner contributes the good name, reputation, creditworthiness, without depositing capital.

c. Syirkah ‘inan. It is a partnership in which the position and composition of the parties involved in, is not the same, both in terms of capital and jobs.
Each partner acts as an agent for the benefit of another party (mutual agency), because of the action taken on behalf of the other partners should be based on the recognition of the law.

d. Syirkah mufawwadah. A partnership in which the position and composition of the parties involved in it should be the same, both in terms of capital, employment, religion, profit or risk of loss. The shape is similar to shirkah as firm, but the firm paid-in capital amount should be not equal.
